Brighten Up Your Loved One’s Day: Jewelry

Wearable gifts to put a smile on a cancer patient’s face.

August 18, 2018 By Cancer Health Staff

Enduring cancer, no matter what the stage, can be very difficult and emotional. Cancer patients benefit tremendously from the support of family and friends, as it makes their journey a little less scary and lonely. Next time you’re planning a visit to a loved one, consider gifting them one of these pieces of jewelry to make their day better.

Allison Daniel Wide Strength Cuff—Silver, $42

Allison Daniel Wide STRENGTH Cuff-Silver

Encouraging words from loved ones can certainly make fighting cancer easier, but wearing and reading inspiring words on a daily basis can sometimes be even more empowering. This cuff, from Allison Daniel's mantra collection, is a reminder never to forget how strong you are. Although the side effects of chemo and other treatments can render you physically weaker, it's your inner strength that'll get you through your toughest days. This cuff will serve as a beautiful and powerful reminder of that fact for anyone battling cancer.

No One Fights Alone® Necklace and Card Gift Set, $15

No One Fights Alone® Necklace and Card Gift Set

To really show you support a loved one, gift him or her this necklace and card set. Choose a necklace with a purple ribbon charm, representing all cancers, or one of the color associated with the cancer he or she is fighting. The necklace will hang close to your loved one's heart, and the card will find a place on a nearby mantel or bedside table, constantly reminding him or her of your love and support.
