Month 138 – So Far, So Good (?)

No hot flashes or wild mood swings yet.

May 25, 2022 By Dan Zeller

---

It's been just over a week since I've been injected with my Death to Testosterone juice, a.k.a., Eligard, and things seem to be going okay so far.

The injection site was through being sore within a matter of hours after the injection, so that was a positive thing. (My arm was sore from my second COVID booster for about 48 hours after that injection.)

About the only real side effect from the Eligard that has kicked in is a bit of tiredness or fatigue. It's as though I'm firing on seven out of eight cylinders right most of the time. Nothing that is debilitating, but it is noticeable. No hot flashes or wild mood swings yet.

I did email the radiation oncologist to let him know that I did, in fact, get the injection, and his response kind of hinted at the fact that it may take a few weeks for the Eligard side effects to really kick in. Time will tell.

****

As a diversion to all of this, I spent the afternoon watching the my hometown Chicago Cubs take on my adopted hometown San Diego Padres at beautiful Petco Park. I can't say that I'm a huge baseball fan, so this is a once-every-few-years thing that I do when the Cubbies come to town. One day, I'll make it to Wrigley Field for the first time ever (blasphemy that I haven't been, I know).

I've got a few other fun things lined up between now and the start of the Zap Fest in late June and hopefully the Eligard side effects don't kick in and ruin those plans.

A few photos from the game today.

Be well!

You may want to turn down the volume before playing. The pre-game music was a bit loud.

This post originally appeared on Dan's Journey Through Prostate Cancer on May 11, 2022. It is republished with permission.

© 2026 Smart + Strong All Rights Reserved.