

Prostate Cancer, Day 5,593 $\frac{3}{4}$ – Scan Results

“Needless to say, I have mixed emotions about these results,” writes prostate cancer blogger Dan Zeller.

March 17, 2026 By Dan Zeller

In the hour or so since my last post, my scan results were posted online:

“No evidence of recurrent prostate cancer or metastatic disease.”

<Sigh>

Needless to say, I have mixed emotions about these results.

I just want an explanation so that we can figure out next steps. After four scans with the same results, I’m of the mindset that I’m in the 10% of patients for whom PSMA PET scans don’t work.

You can bet I’ll be talking about other imaging options during my upcoming appointment, as well as any other plausible explanations for what’s going on.

At this point, I’m tired, frustrated, and stymied.

This post originally appeared March 4, 2026, on Dan’s Journey Through Prostate Cancer. It is republished with permission.
