

Prostate Cancer, Month 172 – PSMA PET & PSA

Blogger Dan Zeller hopes his third PSMA PET scan will find the location of his cancer.

This will be a short update, as not much has really happened in the last month.

Tomorrow, I have my third PSMA PET scan. With luck, we'll actually find the location of the cancer with this scan. That will help us decide what's next in this adventure. I suspect I should be able to access the results online within a week or so. If not, I have a follow-up appointment on 1 April with the urologist.

I was going to get my PSA test done next week, but I wasn't sure what impact a potential government shutdown might have on access to the lab, so I went for the blood draw on Monday. I'm guessing that I'll break the 1.0 ng/mL threshold with this test.

That's it for now. More to come in the days ahead.
