

Prostate Cancer, Month 174 – Nothin’

Nothing to report—except a trip to New Zealand!—means things are going well as I continue to live life with prostate cancer, writes Dan Zeller.

May 15, 2025 By Dan Zeller

I feel as though I’m falling down in my blogging responsibilities, because I got nothin’ to report this month. However, that means that things are going well as I continue to live life with prostate cancer.

In fact, things are going so well that I treated myself to a little retirement bucket list trip to Aotearoa / New Zealand that I just returned from last week.

It was a fantastic, albeit, too short of a trip to a place that I’ve been wanting to visit and photograph for years. I’ll spare you the details here, but if you’re interested and have half an hour or so, you can check out my full trip summary (with over 100 photos and videos) here:

Aotearoa / New Zealand

It’s best viewed on a larger screen so you can click on the images to enlarge them for viewing.

Be well!

This post originally appeared May 13, 2025, on Dan’s Journey Through Prostate Cancer. It is republished with permission.
